1. Background
Since the epidemic for more than three years, the country's economy has been greatly affected, the three major industries of agriculture, handicrafts and commerce have suffered a big impact, the living conditions and income level of the people have declined compared with before, and some people have also lost their jobs and lacked economic sources. Under these circumstances, the country is in urgent need of economic recovery and development. Therefore, the means of informal economy was once again proposed to boost people's consumption, ease the pressure of unemployment and employment, effectively guarantee the basic life of the people, and maintain social harmony and stability.

In 2020, the then Premier of the People's Republic of China, Li Keqiang, while visiting an old neighborhood in Yantai, Shandong Province, praised the street stall economy as the fireworks of the earth and the vitality of China, and in turn encouraged the people to try to utilize the informal economy to secure the basic livelihood of themselves and their families. In the same year, the Central Civilization Office made a "major adjustment", also put forward a clear requirement: the national civilized city assessment indicators, not to occupy the road business, street markets, mobile vendors as a civilized city assessment assessment within the assessment. [1]

Under the instructions of the central government and local policies, the stall economy came into being, and the culture of stalls emerged and developed, causing certain repercussions. It not only alleviates the practical problems of the society, but also brings vitality and vigor to the city. Therefore, under certain circumstances, the informal economy should be encouraged and supported and vigorously developed. In this case, for the night market operators, it is more important to guide the operation of informal economy scientifically and reasonably, which will be a big test. As one of the eight large night markets in Fuzhou, Fuzhou Trend Street Night Market has certain research value as a model of formalized operation of informal economy in Fuzhou.

5. Summary

The process of formalizing the informal economy requires a combination of flexibility and rigidity. [4] Scientific and rational planning, management and operation of the operator will bring many benefits.

One of them is to improve the national governance capacity. The development of the ground stall economy puts forward higher requirements for urban fine governance planning and management, and some departments have to explore ways to both meet the needs of stall owners and enhance the well-being of urban residents.

Secondly, it promotes the construction of urban culture. The stall culture makes the city more endemic, warm and tolerant. It expands the domestic demand of the public, promotes the domestic economic cycle, and reduces the economic pressure and impact of international trade friction on our country.

Third, increase the social benefits. Ground stalls bring a certain range of short-time high-frequency flow, becoming an important part of the city's economic growth. Ground stalls promote the growth and development of small and micro-enterprises, prompting the creation of brands and credibility of informal employment, and nurturing entrepreneurial spirit. [5].
