Research on the path of enhancing the international competitiveness of China's service trade

Xiaoyan Gao
School of International Business, Yunnan University of Finance and Economics, Yunnan Kunming 650221, China

Abstract: This paper aims to explore the way to improve the international competitiveness of service trade. Through the analysis of the theoretical basis and current situation of the international competitiveness of service trade, this paper puts forward the promotion path of optimizing the policy and institutional environment, improving the service quality and innovation, and strengthening the talent training and international cooperation. At the same time, this paper also analyzes the challenges of improving the international competitiveness of service trade, and puts forward the corresponding coping strategies. Through this study, it is expected to provide useful reference for improving the international competitiveness of China's service trade.

Keywords: service trade; international competitiveness; promotion path

1. Introduction

In the context of global economic integration, trade in services has become an important force in promoting economic growth and international exchanges. For China, enhancing the international competitiveness of service trade not only not only a key link to enhance the country's economic strength and optimize the economic structure, but also an important way to enhance the international discourse power and achieve sustainable development. However, although China's service industry has shown a booming trend in recent years, it still faces many challenges and difficulties in facing the fierce competition in the international market.

Specifically, in the development process of China's service trade, there are problems such as insufficient optimization of industrial structure, insufficient innovation ability and insufficient obvious brand effect. These problems not only restrict the internationalization process of China's service industry, but also affect China's competitiveness in the global service trade. Therefore, it is of great importance to enhance the international competitiveness of the relevant theory and practical experience of China's service trade through thorough study and analysis of the problems and deficiencies in the development of China's service trade.

This paper aims to explore the competitive advantages and disadvantages of China's service industry in the international market by comparing the development of service trade, and then put forward targeted strategies and suggestions. We will combine with China's national conditions and market demand, from the policy environment, talent training, technology innovation, brand construction, a comprehensive analysis of the development of trade in services and potential, in order to provide the sustainable and healthy development of trade in services with theoretical support and practical guidance, promote the development of trade in services to the direction of high quality.

2. The theoretical basis of the international competitiveness of service trade

2.1. Definition and classification of trade in services

Service trade, as a special form of trade, mainly involves the services provided by cross-border delivery, overseas consumption, commercial existence and natural person movement. In today's globalization, service trade has gradually become an important part of international trade, reflecting the economic cooperation and technical exchanges among countries. These services not only cover traditional fields such as finance, education and medical care, but also involve emerging industries such as information technology and cultural creativity. The rapid development of trade in services has not only promoted the growth of the global economy, but also promoted cultural exchanges and technological progress among countries.

2.2. Evaluation index of the international competitiveness of service trade

To evaluate the international competitiveness of a country's service trade, we usually need to refer to a series of evaluation indicators. Among them, the market share is an important indicator to measure the share of a country's service trade in the international market, reflecting the position of the country's service export in the global market. The trade competitiveness index further reveals the competitive advantages and disadvantages of a country's service trade by comparing the relationship between the difference of service import and export and the total amount of service trade. These evaluation indicators not only provide decision basis for policy makers, but also provide researchers with powerful tools to analyze the international competitiveness of service trade.

2.3. Impact factors of the international competitiveness of service trade

There are various factors affecting the international competitiveness of service trade. First of all, policy and institutions are directly related to the international competitiveness of service trade. High-quality service and innovative service models can attract more international customers. In addition, talent training and international cooperation are also the key to enhancing the international competitiveness of service trade. Improve the overall quality of the service industry by strengthening personnel training and promote the development of advanced technology and management experience.

3. Analysis of the international competitiveness of service trade

3.1. Overview of the development of global trade in services

In the context of increasing global economic integration, the development of trade in services has increasingly become an important engine to promote world economic growth. In recent years, the growth rate of global trade in services has exceeded the trade in goods, especially in information technology, financial services, education, medical care and tourism, and the scale and scope of trade in services are constantly expanding. With the deepening of globalization, the interdependence of service trade among countries is gradually increasing, and trade in services has become a link connecting the global economy. The growth trend of global trade in services is a sustained growth, and the growth rate is higher than that of trade in goods. This trend shows that trade in services plays an increasingly important role in the global economy and becomes a new driving force for world economic growth. The structure of trade in services is also changing, expanding from traditional tourism and transportation to high-end services such as financial services and information technology. This structural change reflects the development trend of the global service industry, and also reflects the competition trend of various countries in the field of service trade.

3.2. Development status of China's service trade

In recent years, China's service trade has also shown a trend of rapid development, and has become an important force to promote China's economic growth. However, compared with the international advanced level, there is still a large gap in China's service trade, which is embodied in the following aspects:

First of all, the scale of China's service trade expands year by year, but the structure of service trade is not optimized enough. Traditional service trade such as tourism and transportation still account for a large proportion, while high-end services such as finance and information technology have a relatively low proportion. This structure is not conducive to the long-term development of China's service trade. Secondly, the competitiveness of China's service trade in the international market is relatively weak. This is mainly reflected in the low added value of China's service trade, the lack of brand influence, and the lack of innovation ability of service trade. These problems restrict the internationalization process and the promotion of competitiveness of China's service trade.

3.3. Assessment of the international competitiveness of China's service trade

3.3.1. Market share

When evaluating the international competitiveness of China's service trade, the first thing to consider is the market share. In recent years, the share of China's service trade in the global market shows an increasing trend year by year, which reflects the rapid development of China's service trade and the gradual recognition of the international market. However, compared with developed countries, China's market share of China's service trade is still relatively low, which means that our competitiveness in the international market needs to be further improved. To increase our market share, we need to strengthen the innovation capacity of trade in services and improve the quality and efficiency of services to meet the needs of the international market.

3.3.2. Trade balance

Trade balance is an important indicator to measure the competitiveness of a country's service trade. At present, the trade balance of China's service trade is not ideal, there is a large deficit. This is mainly due to China's service trade in the relatively weak export, and the import demand is relatively strong. In order to improve the trade balance situation, we need to actively explore the international market, promote the export of trade in services, and strengthen the development of the domestic service industry, improve the quality and efficiency of services, so as to attract more international consumers.

3.3.3. Comparative advantage

China's service trade has comparative advantages in some fields, such as tourism and human resource services. Services in these fields have a certain competitiveness in the international market, providing a strong support for the development of China's service trade. However, we should also be aware that these comparative advantages have not yet been fully translated into international competitiveness. In order to further strengthen and expand these advantages, we need to increase investment, improve the quality of service and technology level, strengthen brand building and market promotion, in order to better meet the needs of the international market. At the same time, we should also pay attention to the development of emerging service areas, foster new growth points, and inject new impetus into the development of China's service trade.

4. Exploring the path to enhance the international competitiveness of service trade

4.1. Optimize the policy and institutional environment

In the exploration, the optimization of the policy and institutional environment is undoubtedly a key step. First of all, we need to make further adjustment and improvement of trade policies. This means that we should pay close attention to the new trends and characteristics of the development of global trade in services, timely adjust China's policy orientation on trade in services, and make it more in line with the competition rules and demand changes in the international market. At the same time, the policies and measures should be further refined, and we should formulate targeted supporting policies according to the actual conditions of different industries and regions to promote the balanced development of trade in services. In addition, we should establish a sound service trade policy evaluation mechanism, and make timely feedback and adjustment to the effect of policies, so as to ensure the scientificity and effectiveness of policies.

Secondly, the sound laws and regulations on trade in services are also indispensable. We need to constantly improve the system of laws and regulations on trade in services to provide a strong legal guarantee for the healthy development of trade in services. This includes strengthening the formulation and revision of laws and regulations related to trade in services, clarifying the rights and obligations of trade in services subjects, and standardizing the market order of trade in services. At the same time, we should also strengthen the law enforcement of trade in services, severely crack down on illegal activities in the field of service trade, and maintain a market environment of fair competition. In addition, we should also actively promote the internationalization process of the laws and regulations on trade in services, learn from the advanced international experience, and improve the internationalization level of China's laws and regulations on trade in services.

4.2. Improving service quality and innovation

The improvement of service quality and the promotion of service innovation are the two key ways to enhance the international competitiveness of service trade. Among them, service standardization and brand building and technology innovation and service mode innovation have played a decisive role.

In terms of service standardization and brand building, we must clearly realize that standardization is the basis of improving service quality. By establishing and improving the service standard system, it can ensure the standardization and consistency of the service, so as to improve the service efficiency, reduce the service errors, and then improve the customer satisfaction. At the same time, brand building is the key means to enhance the international competitiveness of service trade. By carefully building a service brand with unique charm and international influence, the service can enhance the recognition of service and market recognition, and then enhance the international competitiveness of service trade.

In terms of technology innovation and service mode innovation, we must keep up with the pace of The Times, strengthen the investment in technology research and development, and promote service product innovation and technology innovation. Through the use of advanced information technology, artificial intelligence and other technical means, the service process can be optimized, the service efficiency and quality can be improved. In addition, the innovation of service mode is also an important way to enhance the international competitiveness of service trade. By exploring new service models, such as sharing economy and customized services, etc., it can meet the diversified needs of different customers, so as to expand the service market and enhance the international competitiveness of service trade.

4.3. Strengthen personnel training and international cooperation

Talent is the key factor in the development of service trade. In order to enhance the international competitiveness of service trade, we must pay attention to personnel training and international cooperation. The core competitiveness of service trade lies in the talent team behind it. In order to enhance the international competitiveness of China's service trade, the primary task is to build and improve the talent training mechanism of service trade. This requires us to start from the source of education, reform the existing education system, increase the courses related to trade in services, and cultivate students' international vision and cross-cultural communication skills. At the same time, enterprises should also increase investment to carry out internal training to improve the professional skills and service quality of existing employees. The government, academia and enterprises should form a joint force, jointly formulate talent training standards, set up special talent training bases for service trade, and provide a steady stream of talent support for the development of service trade.

International cooperation and exchange is another important way to enhance the international competitiveness of China's service trade. By actively participating in international service trade cooperation and exchange, we can timely understand the dynamics of the international market and master advanced service technology and management experience. This can not only improve the overall level of China's service trade, but also provide strong support for China's service trade enterprises to expand the international market. At the same time, international cooperation and exchanges are also an important platform to show China's advantages in service trade, which will help to enhance China's status and influence in the field of international service trade. Therefore, we should actively join the International Trade in Services Organization, participate in the formulation of international trade in services rules, strengthen cooperation and exchanges with other countries in the field of trade in services, and jointly promote the prosperity and development of global trade in services.

5. Challenges and countermeasures to enhance the international competitiveness of service trade

5.1. Major challenges faced

In the context of globalization, the promotion of the international competitiveness of China's service trade is facing many challenges. First of all, the competition in the international market is becoming increasingly fierce, and the dual competition pressure from the developed countries and developing countries is increasing. With advanced technology and mature service system, the developed countries occupy the middle and low end market with low cost and flexible market strategy. Secondly, service trade barriers still exist, such as technical barriers, market access barriers, etc., which seriously restrict the expansion of China's service trade. In addition, uncertainties in the international economic environment, such as the rise of trade protectionism and the slowdown in global economic growth, have also brought considerable impact on China's trade in services.

5.2. Coping strategies and suggestions

Facing the above challenges, our country should adopt active and effective coping strategies. First of all, strengthen the study of international trade in services rules, deeply understand and grasp the changing trend of international trade rules, and provide strong rule support for the development of China's trade in services. At the same time, we will actively participate in international trade in services negotiations and rule-making, strive to make more China's voice on the international stage, and strive for more benefits for China's trade in services. Secondly, strengthen the risk prevention and response capacity building of service trade, and improve the security and stability of service trade through the establishment of a sound risk assessment mechanism and emergency plan. In addition, promote the integrated development of service trade and manufacturing industry, and make use of the industrial chain advantages of manufacturing industry to enhance the overall competitiveness and industrial chain level of service trade. This can not only increase the added value of China's service trade, but also help to promote the transformation and upgrading of China's economy.

6. Conclusion and Outlook

After an in-depth study on the path of improving the international competitiveness of China's service trade, we draw the following conclusions: First, the improvement of the international competitiveness of service trade is not achieved overnight, but a systematic project that requires the joint efforts of the government, enterprises and all sectors of society. At the policy level, it is necessary to continuously deepen the reform and opening up in the field of trade in services, optimize the policy environment, and provide a fairer and more transparent competition environment for service trade enterprises. At the institutional level, laws and regulations on service trade should be improved, and intellectual property protection should be strengthened to ensure the healthy development of service trade. In terms of service quality and innovation, enterprises should pay attention to improving service quality and increase investment in R & D and innovation to meet the diversified needs of the international market. In addition, talent training and international cooperation are also indispensable factors to enhance the international competitiveness of trade in services. China should strengthen talent training, attract and retain high-end talents, strengthen international cooperation and exchanges, learn from international advanced experience, and promote the promotion of the internationalization level of service trade.

Looking ahead, the global economic structure will continue to adjust, transform and upgrade, and trade in services, as an important part of international trade, will maintain rapid growth. China should seize this opportunity, actively respond to the challenges, and constantly enhance the international competitiveness of service trade. To be specific, we need to continue to deepen the reform in the field of trade in services and promote the liberalization and facilitation of trade in services. At the same time, strengthen the connection with the international market, expand the export market of service trade, and enhance the international influence of China's service brands. In addition, we should also pay attention to the development of emerging service areas, foster new growth points, and inject new impetus into the development of China's service trade. In the context of global economic integration, the improvement of the international competitiveness of China's service trade will make important contributions to the realization of high-quality economic development.

References