1. Introduction

Picture books are an important subgenre of children's literature. As a unique literary art form, they show a rich imaginary world through the clever combination of text and illustrations, which not only help children improve their reading but also promote their emotional cognition and expression ability. Emotional rhythm, as an important reading experience, is an important boost to understanding the thoughts and feelings conveyed by picture books. This paper takes the picture book "Watching Owl under the Moon" as an example, and tries to explore the expression and characteristics of emotional rhythm from the perspective of emotional rhythm, and based on this, we shall analyze the expression form of emotional rhythm in picture books, its influence on readers and its application in picture book reading education.

2. Introduction to the Picture Book "Owl Moon"

The picture book "Owl moon", written by Jane Yolen and drawn by John Hewnun, won the "Oscar" for the picture book industry in 1988 and was translated into Chinese for children in China 20 years later. The picture book is written in prose style, telling the story of a father and his daughter's search for an owl together, showing the subtle influence of the father on the child's qualities, such as quietness, strength, and bravery, which are not only needed to observe the owl but also the owl's qualities to survive in the natural world itself.

3. The Theoretical Framework of Emotional Rhythm

3.1. Definition and role of emotional rhyme

"Rhyme refers to a uniform rhythm of the movement of things. Things here include both objective reality and immaterial objects such as speech and behavior. [1]" "From the functional point of view, rhythm can be divided into affective prosody (AP) and linguistic prosody (LP), the former refers to various emotional states expressed by speakers in speech, such as happy, sad, etc.[2]" It is an emotional experience in linguistic expression, involving human emotions, psychological and cognitive aspects, and expresses the strength, pleasantness, and tension of emotions through changes in sound. Emotional rhythm plays an important role in verbal communication. It not only enhances the effect of verbal expression but also helps listeners to better understand and accept the speaker's intention and emotions. In artworks, emotional rhythm refers to a regular change of emotion through emotional expression and rhythmic feeling. Emotional rhythm can enhance the artistic impact of the work, thus bringing the reader a pleasant aesthetic experience.

3.2. The Application and Significance of emotional rhythm in picture books

"In human society, the transmission of information depends on more than the words we use. In many cases, how we say it seems to be more important. [3]" Also in picture books, the same stories that are more beautifully presented in emotional rhythm tend to be richer in the emotional experience they give to child readers. The purpose of picture books is to guide children to read, learn, and grow, and emotional rhythm helps children better understand and accept the emotions and intentions of the picture book, enhancing their reading experience and emotional resonance. Through emotional rhymes in picture books, children can more deeply understand and experience the emotions and themes in the picture books, thus better understanding and accepting the education and revelation in the picture books.

In picture books, the application of emotional rhythm can be achieved through the cooperation of text and illustrations. For example, the author can express emotions through the use of language, such as using some emotional words and adjectives to convey emotions, along with some elements such as voice, intonation, and speed of speech that match the changes of emotions to further strengthen the expression of emotions. In addition, the use of illustration is also an important part of the emotional rhythm, expressing emotion through painting style, color use, picture composition, etc.,
4. Analysis of the Emotional Rhythm of "Owl Moon"

4.1. The relationship between the plot and the emotional rhythm of the picture book

At the beginning of the story, the emotional rhythm changes the form of calm, warm, and mysterious, leading the reader into the story's situation. During the development of the story, the rhythm of emotion changes in the form of tension, suspense, and thrill, leading the reader to the climax of the story. At the climax of the story, the emotional rhythm changes in the form of intensity, tension, and shock, leading the reader to experience the climax of the story. Watching Owls by Moonlight is tightly plotted, with changes in emotional rhythm that echo the development of the plot and changes in emotional rhythm that guide the reader into the story's situation. It tells the story of a little girl watching an owl under the moonlight. The whole storyline is simple, but through the depiction of elements such as the moonlight, the owl, and the little girl, it creates a mysterious and quiet atmosphere, allowing the reader to experience a calm and tranquil emotion during the reading process.

At the beginning of the story, the little girl and her father walk together on the snow, with the moonlight spilling over the earth, when the emotions are gentle and calm, allowing the reader to feel a melancholy atmosphere. As the story progresses, the little girl follows her father on the crunchy snow until when the father calls the owl for the first time, all conveying an expectant, nervous emotion. Dad called a few more times still no response, emotions become a little lost. When the owl suddenly responds, the emotion turns to elation. When the little girl sees the owl, the emotional rhythm suddenly becomes tense and excited, and at the same time, the storyline also changes, and the little girl begins to observe the owl nervously. After the owl flies away, the little girl also relaxes and becomes emotionally relaxed and happy. The emotional rhythm of the whole story is closely linked to the development of the plot, and together they convey the theme of exploration and discovery.

Therefore, it can be said that the relationship between the plot and emotional rhythm of the picture book "Owl moon" is a mutually reinforcing and supportive one. Together, they build the theme that the picture book aims to express, a mutually reinforcing and supportive one. Together, they convey the theme of exploration, discovery, and growth.

4.2. The relationship between characterization and emotional rhythm

There is a close relationship between the characters and the emotional rhythm of this picture book, Owl Under the Moon. The portrayal of the characters and the changes in the emotional rhythm echo each other and together convey the theme of the picture book.

The little girl and the owl are the main characters in this book, and the changes in emotional rhythm interact with the performance of the characters to enhance the reader's emotional perception of them. The little girl in the story is an intelligent, curious, and brave child. The girl's curiosity, and bravery make her bold to explore and discover new things, but also make her feel nervous and excited. This change of emotional rhythm is closely related to the characterization of the little girl. When she sees the owl, her curiosity and bravery are satisfied, and her emotional rhythm becomes relaxed and happy. This change in emotional rhythm echoes the characterization of the little girl, and together they convey the themes of exploration, discovery, and growth.

In addition to the little girl, other characters in the story also relate to emotional rhymes. The father's warmth and care provide a sense of security for the little girl, allowing her to explore and discover with confidence. The image of the owl is also related to the emotional rhythm. When it appears, the emotional rhythm becomes tense and exciting, allowing the reader to feel the tension and excitement. The characters and emotional rhythms throughout the story echo each other and together they build the theme of the picture book.

4.3. The Role of Language, images, and Colors in emotional rhythm

In the picture book Owl moon, language, images, and color all play an important role in the emotional rhythm, and together they present a mysterious, quiet atmosphere that allows the reader to experience a calm, serene emotional rhythm during the reading process.

First of all, language plays a very important role in the emotional rhythm. The author uses some emotional words and adjectives to express emotions, such as "It sounds so sad, so sad." "I've been looking forward to it for a long, long time," "I'm not sad," "I'm so happy I want to laugh," etc. These words and phrases can directly guide the reader into the story situation, so that the reader can better feel. These words and phrases can directly guide the reader into the story situation, allowing the reader to better feel the emotional changes of the characters. In addition, the author also uses elements such as voice, tone, and speed of speech that match the change of emotion to further strengthen the expression of emotion. For example, the father calls "Hoo, hoo hoo hoo, hoo!" In the beginning, he called once and stopped, then he called twice in a row, and the echo came back to the father and he responded again.

Second, "human emotions can be evoked through images." Images also play an important role in emotional rhyme. The picture book adopts a simple and bright drawing style, with vivid colors and reasonable picture composition. By depicting elements such as the moonlight, the snow, the little girl, and the father, the picture book creates a mysterious and quiet atmosphere, allowing the reader to experience a calm and serene emotional rhythm during the reading process. When the little girl sees the owl, the composition and colors of the picture change, becoming tense and full of movement, allowing the reader to feel the tension and excitement of facing the owl. When the owl flies away, the composition and colors of the picture become empty and light, allowing the reader to feel the relaxation of the little girl and the pleasure of enjoying the beautiful scenery.

Finally, color also plays an important role in the emotional rhythm. The colors in the story are mainly composed of the colors of the moonlight, the sky, the woods, and the owl. The colors of the moonlight and the sky are light blue, the color of the woods is green, and the colors of the owls are gray and brown. The choice of these colors can well reflect the emotional rhythm of the story. The light blue and green make the reader feel calm and serene, while the gray and brown add some mystery and tension to the atmosphere.
